

State Department of Education/Public Instruction
COVID-19 Information/Guidance on School Closures and Reopening

As states reopen, reassessing the impact of COVID-19 while maintaining community safety and health is paramount. While most state departments of education and public instruction have published reopening frameworks, it's still too early to determine which options will be selected at this time. When and how a district will reopen vary and are largely determined by local district and board of education authorities.

At end May, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) released reopening guidance for schools and daycares. In addition to state guidance, other considerations include: state and local public health mandates, state and community COVID-19 data, and implementing safety measures to protect students, families, and school personnel.

To date, forty-seven states have released full, partial or draft guidance for districts on reopening in the fall. Four states, Delaware, District of Columbia, Kansas, and New Hampshire have yet to release state guidance. Several Governors convened working groups to develop guidance, and some states and districts are surveying parents and the community. Two states, Hawaii and Rhode Island, have released unified SY20-21 calendars with schools beginning on August 4 and 31.

States have been hit hard by the pandemic, with businesses shuttered and high unemployment levels, state income and sales tax revenues have declined. With most school districts funded through a formula of state and local tax dollars, they brace for unprecedented budget shortfalls in the upcoming school year. As education is typically the largest part of the state budget, cuts as high as 25% of district budgets are anticipated – as the cost of education under the pandemic continues to increase. As officials continue to monitor and manage the crisis, one thing is evident, adapting to this ‘new normal’ will be a challenge for all.

The situation changes rapidly, and we try our best to maintain the information and links. Please visit your state department of education and local school district websites for the most current information.
