

State Department of Education/Public Instruction COVID-19 Information/Guidance on School Closures and Reopening

As states reopened, reassessing the impact of COVID-19 while maintaining community safety and health is paramount. All 50 states and the District of Columbia released guidance for districts, and developed community color-coded COVID-19 transmission classifications for counties. When and how schools are delivering education is largely determined by local district, board of education and health authorities. In addition to state guidance, other considerations include: state and local public health mandates, state and community COVID-19 data, and implementing safety measures to protect students, families, and school personnel.

School reopening options included one or a combination of virtual or remote learning; in-person; or a hybrid. Districts continue to adjust plans as state status' and COVID-19 data is updated. The one constant is schools are preparing for any changes that may arise, and they have developed process and strategies which include hiring their own contact tracers. A drop in public school enrollment is reported across multiple states, attributed to lower than expected Kindergarten enrollment where parents didn't enroll their kids in school or are choosing to delay their kids' start. In turn, the lower numbers impact school budgets which determine the amount of state funding districts receive. Experts warn cooler weather will increase the coronavirus' spread, and the continued impact on school communities is unknown.

A hot topic continues to be the status of high school sports and other extra-curricular activities, with many states delaying or altering the Fall sports season. Several states reversed initial decisions and have flipped some sports back to the fall with others reconsidering based on feedback from parents and communities. In some cases, sports or games were cancelled or postponed based on positive COVID-19 reports. For the most current list, visit the National Federation of State High School Associations (NFHS) website.

The situation changes rapidly, and we try our best to maintain the information and links. Please visit your state department of education and local school district websites for the most current information.
