

Kathryn Lynch-Morin
Ex-officio Representative
Education Commission of the States

Kathryn Lynch-Morin is Director of Communications and Marketing at Education Commission of the States (ECS), a nonpartisan, nationwide organization that helps state leaders develop effective education policy by providing research, analysis and opportunities for cross-state learning. In her role, Kathryn works to elevate ECS's voice and bring its work to life through clear, compelling storytelling, partnering across teams to show how states are learning from one another and leading on behalf of students.

Kathryn brings more than 15 years of experience spanning journalism, nonprofit communications and state government. She previously served as a reporter, a nonprofit communications director and director of communications for a state education agency, where she led strategic communications efforts on complex education policy issues.

She holds a Master of Science in Communications from the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications at Syracuse University. Outside of work, Kathryn enjoys spending time outdoors and has a special interest in wildlife conservation, especially birds.
